

Mission and Installation Contracting Command

Wade C. Cole

U.S. ARMY Deputy to the Commanding General

Wade C. Cole is the deputy to the commanding general for the U.S. Army Mission and Installation Contracting Command responsible for leading its people and managing its resources. The MICC, a subordinate command to the U.S. Army Contracting Command, delivers ready, decisive and synchronized business solutions and contracting support to the Army enterprise. The command consists of about 1,500 Soldiers and Civilian employees assigned to two contracting support brigades, two field directorates, 10 contracting battalions and offices across 30 locations within the continental United States providing support to the Army enterprise.

The MICC provides supported activities with a variety of contracting support to include Soldier recruitment and training, troop deployments, family and Soldier well-being, weapon system sustainment, base operations, and installation and infrastructure readiness.

Prior to joining the MICC headquarters, Mr. Cole served as the deputy to the commander of the 418th Contracting Support Brigade. Previous assignments have included serving as director of the MICC Field Directorate Office at Fort Hood (redesignated Fort Cavazos in 2023), Texas, where he was appointed as the senior contracting official as well.
